Motivators

Motivators are often referred to as Attitudes, the “WHY” that drives a person’s life, actions and decisions. It is a person’s way of looking at life; what they value positively or judge negatively which in turn creates a need that drives an individual to act using their behaviors to achieve personal satisfaction.

How do a person’s Attitudes, Beliefs and Motivators develop? They are a combination of both genetics, the environment, are developed through stages in a person’s life and are related to stimuli such as conflict, stress, pain and through experiencing pleasure, satisfaction and joy.

Understanding your own Motivators and then recognizing the driving forces in other’s lives will help identify and resolve three types of conflict:

You-Me / Me-Me / Me-Job

Talent Insights defines how an individual’s behaviors and motivators blend together, so you’ll understand how to enhance performance and increase overall job satisfaction.
